I really liked that you didn't have to log in. You'd start by selecting which router you wanted to connect to, then when you connected it would give you the option to configure the options, if you wanted. It was very easy to switch routers from the console of the router itself. It did have a bit of trouble finding the router at first. It usually took a few tries to get the IP for the router, but it was very consistent about it. I liked that I didn't have to log in to be part of the network, as long as I had my router password. I'm pretty sure that it worked. There were times that it was frustrating, as it kept trying to ping. I found that if you're on a machine that has a slow connection, and you're only trying to connect to one other computer, it may be best to wait it out. It seemed to be a bit of a problem for multiple connections. It was easy to set up, it just took a bit of experience with this type of tool. After doing some research, I found that the name "NeoRouter Mesh" was no longer in use. I guess I 09e8f5149f

Portable - for your business, for your life An app that I often forget to have on my mobile device, my Mac laptop or even my old desktop PC. This idea just hit me one day.
