Accumulation of spin-labeled cytochrome P450 of Neurospora by aqueous two-phase system. An aqueous two-phase system containing dextran and polyethylene glycol was used as a model system to investigate the immobilization of spin-labeled cytochrome P450 enzymes in vivo. Spin-labeled ferricytochrome P450 purified from Neurospora crassa was treated with 0.1 to 0.5 M NaClO₄ and the spin-labeled cytochrome P450 fraction was subsequently partitioned with dextran and PEG in the aqueous two-phase system. The spin-labeled cytochrome P450 fraction was partitioned over the range of 0.1 to 0.5 M NaClO₄, and the partition coefficients were estimated from the partitioning data. These partition coefficients increased in the range of 0.1 to 0.25 M NaClO₄, and decreased in the range of 0.5 to 0.75 M NaClO₄. These results suggest that cytochrome P450 is reversibly immobilized in the dextran-PEG system at a lower concentration of NaClO₄ than that in living cells.

List of Superfund sites in New Jersey

This is a list of Superfund sites in New Jersey designated under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act (CERCLA) environmental law in the United States. The CERCLA environmental law was passed by the United States Congress in 1980 and signed into law by President Jimmy Carter in December 1980. The Superfund law lists locations, known as Superfund sites, where hazardous materials have polluted public water systems, land, or air so badly as to endanger public health or the environment. The United States Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has identified 54 Superfund sites in New Jersey. Forty one of these have been cleaned up and seventeen other sites are undergoing cleanup efforts. No new Superfund sites were identified in New Jersey between 2011 and 2014.
