Perfect conditions for cooking and brewing, but of course, these are also the perfect conditions for temperature-induced slips, spills and accidents. As you know, Kitchens are often the main focus for houses, and with that in mind, we've selected some of the best tips from experts on what you can do to protect your kitchen. Make sure the larder is locked Of course you don't want your food spoiling, but it's even more important that you don't have your food growing moulds, sprouting or sweating. Stockpiling is a great way of ensuring the food you purchase is going to last. But, you shouldn't assume it'll last forever. Make sure you lock the larder to make sure the food is safe, no matter what the weather is outside. Don't burn your food Sometimes the weather outside can seem warm enough to burn your food or keep it from burning. But in fact, food requires higher temperatures and a completely different cooking method than fires do. If you really want to bake your food, or cook through an entire meal, make sure your kitchen doesn't reach the wrong temperatures. Keep your garden and greenhouse safe The easiest way to fight the cold is to grow your own fruit and vegetables, and here in the UK, there are some of the best growing conditions. That means you'll be able to enjoy a very productive
