According to EA, the new version of the game will “imagine you not just as a player – you’re now a part of the team.” “If you can move on the pitch, the AI will be able to move with you,” said Creative Director David Rutter. “It is vital to our vision to make the game as true to the sport as possible and there will be no ‘stiff’ players like in previous iterations.” “We are focused on adding ‘flexibility and fluidity’ to the player AI in both movement and decision-making,” he continued. “The net result is that you’ll be able to make a move that on the surface seems like the right move, but just because you've selected it in the heat of the moment, the AI will see it for what it is, and will be able to adapt its play in response." Part of the motivation behind this new technology in the series is because the player models in previous iterations have not been very realistic in terms of movement and speed, making players hard to control and maneuverable. "In FIFA 20, players were large, the ball was small, and the changes they made in their movements and ball control meant that they were able to do things they shouldn't have been able to do," explained Rutter. Rutter also explained that the player models in previous iterations had been relatively static, but "we wanted to make the players more dynamic and responsive, so we embarked on a journey to make players appear more natural on the pitch." "The technology behind the new player model has been developed, implemented and tested extensively by former tennis player turned FIFA technical director Dave Rutter and his team,” said Pete Rizzo, Director of Digital Development at Electronic Arts. “The result is real-world data that we were able to build upon, giving us the opportunity to make an even better game.” The results of this new player model seem to be promising, with FIFA Ultimate Team Manager Christian Thurau saying in an interview: “In FIFA 22, we are seeing our players play in more realistic ways, but this has no influence on their gameplay and there are no artificial enhancements to skill. The fans will definitely get a different kind of experience with the improved intelligence of the

Fifa 22 Features Key:

- HyperMotion Technology - Powered by player motion, we've added enhanced Player Impact and Final Pass controls for more accurate ball control and touch, as well as greater playmaking control. By mimicking the real motion of the ball, we've also added elements that will instantly recognise the exact shots you try and make on goal and adjust the player's speed to suit the real-life motion of the ball.
- Editor The player's deep annotation tools - including a ball drop tool and precision meshwork tools - have been enhanced to create a more tailored player that strikes a balance between realistic appearance and accessibility.
- Matchday - Seasonal or Classic games are typically played at a fast pace in a league format, with supporters jumping in with chants and protests at key moments. FIFA 22 removes the limitations of the career mode by throwing you straight into a full-blooded, live, matchday experience.
- Live Player Tracking - Track how your player responds on the pitch when competing for goals in a full game of matchday action, and release a wall of virtual spectators on either side of your pitch to further immerse you in the match.
