We assessed the importance of the medial temporal lobe (MTL) for the recollection of verbal episodic memory (VEM), using the VEM deficit model (VEMD). We investigated changes in the functional anatomy of the MTL in the MTL group (n = 24) by means of cortical thickness (CT) and structural network (SN) analysis, and correlated these anatomical changes with changes in the VEMD in individuals with chronic traumatic brain injury (TBI) (n = 19). We performed a linear regression of VEMD and CT and SN parameters, in a subgroup (n = 15). Individuals with chronic TBI had a large number of VEMD than controls (TBI mean = 23.61; controls mean = 11.71). TBI individuals with significant VEMD on the VEID-2 were significantly thinner in the right medial temporal lobe (RTML), particularly in the entorhinal and parahippocampal cortices and in the surrounding hippocampus. The RTML functional network was smaller than the network of controls in individuals with significant VEMD on the VEID-2. However, a regression of VEMD on CT and SN parameters in individuals with VEID-2 scores showed that only in the TBI group was the RTML network correlated with VEMD. The RTML network correlated with the VEMD in the TBI group (r = -0.68, P = .008) and was not correlated in controls (r = 0.07, P = .87). These results suggest that the
