Tip Press Shift+Click to select a range of pixels in a single click. Instead of having to drag your cursor over a bunch of pixels to select them, you can press Shift+Click. You can also use Option+Click to select a whole bunch of pixels. The following list describes the basic things you can do with Photoshop. See the online Help file for more information: * Use the Brush tool (see Making selections by painting). * Fill an area by choosing an image or using the New Layer/Rectangle tool. Make simple shapes; add text; put shapes on other shapes; clone and merge layers; manipulate layers; and hide and show layers. You can use the Eraser tool (Figure 13-2) to remove unwanted objects, make selections, and so on. ## Adjustment Layers You can use the Adjustment layer to make changes to the overall look of a photo, in a way similar to what you can do in the Adjustments panel in Camera Raw (Developing with Camera Raw) or Lightroom (Chapter 8). You can use the Adjustment layers to erase unwanted parts of an image—for example, put a border around it—or simply make changes that affect the overall look of an image (see Figure 13-3). Figure 13-4 shows how the image looks with an Adjustment layer applied. When you make a change using an Adjustment layer, Photoshop automatically saves the original image; the change becomes part of the image's history. When you save an image, Photoshop keeps a copy of the original, unedited image in case you need to undo the change or make other changes.

Image copyright PA Image caption The firm said Brexit was likely to cost it extra GBP100m a year The cost to a British-owned business of a no-deal Brexit is more than the amount of extra spending that would be required in Wales to plug a budget deficit, according to a report. The accountancy firm, Clifford Chance, used the higher estimate of UK wide costs for a no-deal Brexit, found an Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) report. The worst-case scenario was that Brexit costs could cost the UK economy £196bn more in 10 years, according to the ESRC. But the Welsh Government said Brexit would cost Wales "a few pennies". It would cost less than 1% of Wales' GDP and would add £1.50 per person to the cost of living, it claimed. The ESRC report used a wider range of estimates, from the government to private firms, than the UK government. The report - The costs and consequences of a no-deal Brexit - also says that 15% of small businesses will have difficulty making sure their staff can remain in the UK, while the number of UK jobs in EU countries will rise by 2.6 million in 15 years. The report also says that Britain's economy would expand by 1.5% if no-deal were to happen. According to the report's analysis, Britain could end up with as much as a 3.2% decline in GDP in three to five years if a no-deal Brexit happens, which equates to about GBP18bn per year in lost earnings. "I would think that, in a worst-case Brexit, you would be looking at the equivalent of three years lost growth in the economy," John Authers, a senior lecturer in economics at Cardiff University, told the BBC. "We've already seen that three years of weaker economic growth in the UK is quite a big deal, it is equivalent to about 1.7% of GDP." But Dr Peter Henig, of the Centre for European Reform think-tank, said that the findings were "fuzzy" and "unquantifiable" but it did give an indication of what would happen. "It does put a figure on the amount of damage that a hard Brexit would cause to the economy as a whole," he said. "But, in contrast to the World Bank, that figure was not
