Kanchana (2011).Nova Scotia's Liberal government will fund a new $165-million chemical plant to produce nontoxic plastic for medical applications, despite concerns about health and the environment. The new facility in Liverpool will be the "first on the planet to produce this kind of plastic," said Premier Stephen McNeil. "We are convinced that this project will continue Nova Scotia's long history of innovation in chemical and pharmaceutical manufacturing," McNeil said. The announcement was made during a news conference at Plant Nova Scotia. The new facility will replace an existing plant that belongs to U.S.-based chemical company The Dow Chemical Company. Dow's current plan was to close the site in Liverpool by 2017, but the new Liberal government announced an agreement with the company on Thursday, allowing the new plant to continue operating. The existing plant will also continue operating until the new site is completed, said McNeil. The Premier said the Liberal government will continue to argue for an increase in funding for generic drugs and the province will also work with industry to determine what it needs to develop self-sufficient health care services. Plant Nova Scotia's plant will have a capacity of more than 10,000 tons of the plastic per year. (Centre for Rural and Northern Issues/The Canadian Press) "We do have to work with them to see where is the evidence to do that," he said. "Nova Scotia as I said a while back, in provincial health care spending, it's
